LULLABY For LOUIE

MARMADUKE MOUSE was curled up snugly in his little bed but he couldn't go to sleep. Something was missing from the castle but what was it? He thought and thought and then finally he knew that what was missing from the castle was the sound of King Louie's snoring. King Louie snored louder than anyone in the entire kingdom and Marmaduke always was lulled to sleep by the even sounds of "ZZZZZZZ zzzzzzz."

Soon Marmaduke began to hear other strange noises. They sounded like, "Clomp, clomp. Shuffle, shuffle." Then a big voice boomed and echoed through the castle shouting, "MARMADUKE, COME HERE THIS MINUTE!"

It was the voice of the King and Marmaduke leaped out of bed and ran as fast as he could to the Royal bedroom where he found Louie pacing the floor in his pajamas and slippers and making the noise that sounded like, "Clomp, clomp. Shuffle, shuffle."

"What's wrong?" panted the little mouse after his long run down the hall. "Why aren't you in bed and asleep, Louie?"

"That's what I'd like to know," growled the lion. "I've counted about a million sheep and I've walked this floor until I'm about crazy. I'm tired but I can't go to sleep. Do something about it."

"Me?" squeaked Marmaduke. "You want ME to put you to sleep?"

"That's what I said," snarled Louie. "I'm the King and I command you to put me to sleep."

"S-s-sure," stammered Marmaduke as he walked from the room. "I—I'll do it. J-just wait r-right here."

"But how will I do it?" he asked himself as he ran down the great hall stairs of the castle. Then he thought of warm milk and hurried to the big refrigerator in the Royal kitchen. He poured milk from a bottle and warmed it and went racing back to King Louie's bedroom.

"Here's some warm milk," he told Louie. "Maybe this will put you to sleep."

Louie took one gulp and then let out a howl, "Yeow, I've been poisoned!" Then Marmaduke sniffed it and realized that the milk was sour.

"I—I'm sorry, Louie," he apologized. "It was a mistake. But I have a better idea. How about a nice warm bath?"

"Anything," moaned Louie. "Get the water in the tub and I'll try it."

Marmaduke filled the tub but he forgot to feel the water to know whether it was hot or cold. And when King Louie put his foot into the tub, he let out a screech that made shivers go down

Marmaduke's back. "It's like ice," he cried. "What are you trying to do, freeze me to death?"

"Oh, no," explained Marmaduke. "I made another mistake. But why don't you get into bed now and let me read you a bedtime story?"

"Well," said Louie, smiling for the first time, "that's not a bad idea. I should have thought of it before."

Marmaduke couldn't remember any stories so he grabbed a book and began reading. "Once upon a time there was a haunted house," he began, "and it was filled with ghosts. People who went there heard weird noises and saw eerie shadows on the wall and—"

"STOP!" screamed Louie. "You know I hate ghost stories. They give me bad dreams. Try something else and be quick about it. I'm getting more tired by the minute."

Marmaduke had to think fast. "I know," he said suddenly. "I'll sing you a lullaby."

Then, in his mousey little voice, he began, "Lullaby, Louie, upon the tree top. When the wind blows, the—"

"STOP!" thundered Louie. "Do you think that squeaky, squawky voice of yours could put anybody to sleep?"

And with that, he jumped from his bed in a rage and rushed after Marmaduke who ran as fast as he could down the hall and toward the great stairway. But as the mouse slid down the bannister, King Louie caught his toe in the carpet on the top step and fell, "Clomp, clomp, PLOP!" to the floor below.

Marmaduke couldn't bear to look at first, afraid that the King was dead from the blow upon his head. Then he heard a familiar sound. It was, "ZZZZZ zzzzz ZZZZZ zzzzz." The King was sleeping and the heavy snoring made Marmaduke sleepy, too. He curled up on the floor near King Louie and soon he was fast asleep.

The next morning, Louie awoke rested and happy. "How did you do it?" he asked. And Marmaduke was afraid to tell him about the fall down the stairs and the hit on the head so he said, "I put you to sleep with my lullaby."

That's why, if you were to walk past Louie's castle at night, you might hear a squeaky little voice singing a plaintive song, "Lullaby, Louie, on the tree top—" Louie goes to sleep because he doesn't like to listen. Then he starts to snore, "ZZZZZ zzzzz ZZZZZ zzzzz" and then Marmaduke curls up in his little bed and sleeps, too. Because Marmaduke sleeps best when Louie snores the loudest.
